History of Epps-McGill Farmhouse

More than 65 years ago, Weaver and Margaret McGill rented a two-story home in Kingstree, South Carolina, as tenant farmers where they and their family members worked the land in the sharecropping system more than two decades.

In the 1970s, this family made history becoming the owners of this property, which rarely ever happened in the lives of southern sharecroppers. This property is now known as Epps-McGill Farmhouse. Built in 1905, the extraordinary history of the Farmhouse led to its selection to be added to the National Registry of Historic Places in September 2020.

McGill and Associates, Inc. is working to raise funds to stabilize, restore and preserve this national historic gem and ensure its legacy continues to be shared.
